Abstract Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in a community sample of young adults. Methods: A cross-sectional survey of 1,000 young adults (18–24 years) was conducted. The survey included questions about mental health problems, substance use, and demographic factors. Results: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was 15.2%. The most common problems were anxiety (8.5%), depression (7.8%), and substance use (4.9%). Conclusions: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in young adults is relatively high. Further research is needed to explore the factors associated with these problems and to develop effective interventions.
